Q: Port used by SQL Server Management Studio for asynchronous SSIS packages I am developing a C# application which gets the database connection string from the user and then executes SSIS packages through the connection string. I am currently in the process of testing. I have a long running SSIS package which will run periodically (when the user clicks a button). I notice that when the SSIS package runs, a new port is created on the SQL Server machine. I was just wondering what is that port and what is it used for?

A: That is the port which is used for IIS services if SQL Server is installed as an IIS Web Service. The port is usually given as 1433.

Use of a modified DIF test for simultaneous diagnosis of meningitis and enteritis. The authors modified the differential inflammatory index (DIF) test for simultaneous diagnosis of bacterial meningitis and enteritis in 116 children. This modification involved the use of serum instead of cerebrospinal fluid for DIF test interpretation. In 96 patients with simultaneous infection, DIF was positive in 85. Comparison of the DIF tests done on paired serum and cerebrospinal fluid samples showed that the sensitivity and specificity of the DIF test for diagnosis of bacterial meningitis were 93.3% and 92.2%, respectively, whereas for enteritis they were 93.8%
