The tripeptide model is investigated in view of its ability to reproduce the features of the peptide chain, and to describe its folding. The model has been constructed by use of an angular function, similar to the one used for the geometric description of spherical surfaces. A density functional theory has been used to study the structure of the tripeptide model. A comparative study between the tripeptide model and real peptide chains has been performed for three different systems: the dipeptide H<sub>2</sub>N-Ala-Gly, a tetrapeptide H<sub>2</sub>N-Ser-Thr-Gly-Ala-NH<sub>2</sub> and a tripeptide H<sub>2</sub>N-Ser-Asp-Gly-Ala-NH<sub>2</sub>. Some intermolecular contacts between the molecular pairs have been considered for the tripeptide model, while a single contact is found between the dipeptide molecule and the rest of the peptide chain. At least five people were killed when a pickup truck crashed through a barricade at the French-Spanish border on Friday, slamming into a car carrying a tourist and a firefighter. The truck careened into the car while it was stopped to allow some passengers to cross at the checkpoint near the town of Hendaye, southwest of the capital, Paris. Passengers in the car were taken to the hospital and three firefighters were also injured, according to local reports. "One driver was killed, three others were injured, and four people in the car were also injured," a spokesman for the firefighters' union said. Police sources said the truck was carrying seven passengers and two of the men died at the scene. The identities of the victims have not been released. The driver of the truck has been detained and a file will be opened for public prosecution, local authorities said. Firefighters inspect the scene of a car that
