The Pen tool allows you to add simple linear or irregular text to your pictures. The goal here is to create original handwritten text, not just copy and paste something that was typed in a Word document. The Text tool allows you to move and edit various text and shapes. The Gradient tool allows you to create and edit two-color or multi-color radial gradients. A gradient is used for solidifying the image, making one color gradually transparent to another. Here is an introduction to using these tools to create and edit an image of your own. Create a new image by going to File > New and navigate to the place where you want your new image to go. Go to the Filter menu and choose the Type tool. Use the Thumbnail Toolbox to change the size of your image. Click once on the center of the image to resize it, or double click on the corners to resize it by selecting the view area you want to resize. Click once again when the thumbnail is in the view you want to use. If you want to resize the image in both directions, hold down the Ctrl (CMD on a Mac) key while clicking the corners. The image will then be resized proportionally. To reset the size, move the thumbnail where you want it and click again. Tap the plus (+) sign to add a new layer to the image. Make sure that the background layer is set to White or Clear if you want the layer to be transparent. If you want to add a gradient overlay to the image, select the Gradient tool from the toolbox or click Edit > Gradient. Select the colors and the mode you want from the Gradient palette. The Gradient mode determines how the fill gradient is applied to the image. There are several different modes, such as Linear, Radial, and Gradient. The colors of the gradient you can use are located under the Gradient palette. The colors will be arranged linearly from top to bottom of the palette. You can also start with a solid color for the start and end of the gradient and control the intensity of color from there. If you want to add transparency to the gradient, you can type the Transparency value in the transparency bar. The value will be measured in percentage transparency.

Once you are satisfied with the gradient, click OK to apply it. To the left of the Type tool, there is a drop-down menu for several

If the area is damaged, you can clean it up with the Paint Bucket tool. For example, if you paint an area of a photo, it becomes a new layer with your work. You can use the Pen Tool, the one with the paint bucket and the line selection tool, to draw lines and shapes. The Gradient Tool applies color tones to a selected area. The Magic Wand tool scans a rectangular area and blends color based on the pixels inside that area. Since the old PSD format is so widely used, Photoshop has had these features in all the versions and even in the CS2 and CS3 versions of Photoshop: A History panel that records steps you take on an image. To create a new version, select the menu Tools/New and choose Version from the menu that appears, as shown in Figure 1-5. Your image is automatically saved, so don't worry about losing work. Figure 1-5: Start a new version of an image. You can view the History panel by selecting History on the menu bar. If you prefer to turn off the History panel for a particular image, use the menu Tools/Options/Presets/History, and uncheck the box that says Show History.

The Blur or Sharpen Filter The Blur or Sharpen Filter works by increasing or decreasing the intensity of pixels within an image, creating or removing noise from the pixels. You use the level of the filter to control the amount of change the filter makes. The Sharpen filter works well on portraits or people shots to make up for light blur caused by the camera flash.

Sharpening without filter To sharpen images without using a filter, you need to use the Local Adjustment tool, as outlined in Chapter 7.

Sharpen with filter Use the Filter/Blur or Sharpen Filter menu option to choose one of the available blur or sharpening filters, as shown in Figure 1-6. Figure 1-7 shows the effect of the Blur filter on an image. Figure 1-6: Use the Filter/Blur or Sharpen Filter menu option to see the available options.
