It has become a common sight to see individuals or organizations erect a sign atop of a pole. These signs are adapted to be read from a distance. Such signs can be temporarily held in place by an adhesive (such as an adhesive tape) which may be applied to the pole. However, this temporary fix is only useful for an organization until such time that a permanent sign can be affixed to the pole and a second adhesive can be applied to the pole to secure the permanent sign to the pole. To achieve a more permanent fix, the pole is typically made of a painted steel or aluminum and
