On the good news front, I've been working on an experimental project. I'm giving this a shot, trying to create a new weapon. It's going to be a modified version of the "assault rifle" in the game that I've been working on for a while now. The goal isn't to beat the game, but to challenge myself to make something different. I'm going to focus on physics, motion and AI. I'm setting the project for the next few days and weeks, so it's not like I have much time. On the other hand, I think it would be nice to have some experimental fun and see where I can take it. Anyway, I think this will be great practice and help me prepare for my long-term project. There are a few risks going into this. I'm relying a lot on 3D Modeling that I've only recently started to use, and I don't have many resources to access. I'm also going to be using Unity, which I haven't had much experience with. It will probably be hard to get it to the point where it looks like I want it to look, and I'm not even sure if it will work. The short version is I'm pretty confident that it'll work, but I really don't know. I'm just going to have to see how it goes. Aspergillus inflat
