The present invention relates to a scroll compressor having a scroll vane which is movable in the axial direction of the compressor and can be moved between a base end portion of a scroll wrap and a non-rotational fixed body portion, such as a housing end of a scroll wrap, through the intermediary of a vane guide ring, to produce low-pressure gas, and then retract to the non-rotational portion as the compressor compresses the gas into high-pressure gas. A conventional scroll compressor has a scroll wrap movable in the axial direction of the compressor. The scroll wrap is formed into a spiral shape, and is provided with a base end portion which is fixed to a housing end of a housing. The scroll wrap is moved radially in the axial direction to compress a gas contained in the housing. The housing has a narrow portion in which the scroll wrap is moved radially in the axial direction of the compressor. A primary fluid flow is formed around the narrow portion of the housing, and is moved in the axial direction of the compressor to form a compression space in which the gas is compressed. The compression space communicates with an outlet port through a discharge port. A vane guide ring is disposed between the scroll wrap and the housing end to separate the base end portion of the scroll wrap from the housing end. As the vane guide ring retreats in accordance with the movement of the scroll wrap in the axial direction of the compressor, the base end portion of the scroll wrap can be guided by the vane guide ring so as to be movable through a slot defined by the vane guide ring. When the gas is compressed into high-pressure gas, the vane guide ring extends towards the housing end by the movement of the scroll wrap in the axial direction of the compressor. The vane guide ring is biased by a compression spring toward the housing end. When the scroll compressor compresses the high-pressure gas, the vane guide ring retracts and urges the base end portion of the scroll wrap towards the housing end. Thus, the base end portion of the scroll wrap can be d0c515b9f4

A new method for the regioselective acylation of polyhydric alcohols (R1OHs) in a microwave reactor is described. Microwave reactions of R1OH and the corresponding aldehydes were performed with catalytic amounts of N-bromosuccinimide (NBS) and 3-(4-pyridyl)propionyl chloride (PPCl) in Me(2)CO. Electron-donating aldehydes, such as 3-acetamido-3-pyridinol and 3-(1-phenylethylideneamino)-3-oxopropanoic acid, reacted preferentially with a primary OH group of the R1OHs, whereas the corresponding electron-deficient aldehydes, such as 2-pyridinemethanol, gave a predominant acylation of the secondary OH group. On the other hand, acylations of either R1OHs or the corresponding aldehydes were completely suppressed when the reactions were carried out in the presence of TFA.

Q: Bypassing AWS-SLB rules for invalid traffic I have a scenario where I need to allow invalid traffic to hit our new SLB. I have multiple AWS instances which have web requests (from different client apps) that are hitting our SLB, and some of them have been invalid (error codes 200 and 400). I would like to pass these through the inbound rules because these are the web traffic - if the user makes a request then the responses are not 200 or 400
