That's why I've been saying that the individual (as well as the collective) is in danger of being replaced by artificial intelligence. Just a few decades ago, the average person would have thought of AI as a fad of the scientific community. Now the reality of AI replacing individual will probably be in our lives within a decade or so. If you are still a "little bit depressed" from the news, then you can attempt to face reality by reading this and this. It's what I did. How can I guess why you're a bit depressed? Some of your "issues" overlap with depression, for example how you feel a loss of belonging, or how some problems are somewhat "turning you off". You go to the doctor, you get your "fix" and then the depression starts to fade away. However, now that you've got a little bit of extra time on your hands, maybe try to make a more balanced life? You mentioned that you like physics and economics. It's true that there's 595f342e71
