Telugu. Fatigue Crack Growth analysis... Nam.Q: Does the death penalty have a disproportionate impact on minorities in the USA? As a likely minority myself (I was born to immigrant parents), and an advocate for the abolition of the death penalty in the U.S., I'd like to know: Is there any data to suggest that minorities in the U.S. are over-represented among those who have been executed? A: I am not aware of any official statistical breakdown of race of those executed in the USA but the short answer is likely yes. Here is a link to a google scholar search that came up with three major papers on race in capital punishment. The first paper is the most recent and makes a summary of the literature that suggests that ethnic minorities are both disproportionately represented in the population that is executed, and also in the population of those who plead guilty to capital charges, but not in the population of those that are found guilty after a trial. The same article notes that the data is not good enough to draw any conclusions about whether any particular ethnic group is disproportionately represented in the sentenced or sentenced to death. The second article reviews the literature and concludes that there is evidence of higher sentences for minority offenders compared to the general population, but there are no significant differences in sentencing between white/Caucasian and black/African American offenders. The third article suggests that state surveys suggest that the race of the convicted could be a factor influencing the charge or sentencing, suggesting that black and Hispanic populations in particular are overrepresented in the sentenced and sentenced to death compared to the general population. Ask HN: Review my startup www.checklist.us cbalo This will be my first web project so please be gentle. I've been playing with the site for a few days and it's pretty basic right now, I just need a few critical masses of feedback and ideas. It's not live yet, I've been getting the basics working first. =====
