Don't ask me to contact the admin(s). I have been trying for days. _____ Old Wolf (Disclaimer: See second post in this topic)If you've ever come away from a concert feeling a little bit like you've been fooled, well, the trickster, Chuck Berry, is behind this slick little campaign. The Texas-bred songwriter/record-producer/taster has snagged the web and social media by his suspenders with this new song called "Trick Or Treat (For The Win)"—and you're probably thinking, "How'd he do that?" In short, he did it with some multi-level marketing. He hired a PR firm, a digital marketing agency and a musicians agency—all with a single purpose: to bring attention to his brand new single. That was the easy part. Here's how he did it. Chuck made it to no. 1 in the iTunes Pop charts in his home state of Texas, then was able to land a play by the legendary Billy Idol, no stranger to Chuck's unique talents. He was linked to the number one Pop single in the UK and No. 2 in Germany. Then, of course, being the wily author he is, Chuck knew to offer the masses what they'd come for—a YouTube video of him performing the song for millions. Every detail of the social campaign was carefully crafted by Chuck. He contacted radio stations across the US, hitting them with demand letters from his musicians and record label/production company. He also enlisted the help of a massive press office, making phone calls and sending emails and texts to the media. He sent his label to PR gurus and he hired a digital marketer. On the broadcast side, he landed a bajillion plays on the digital radio stations, Spotify, Shazam, digital outlets and got his song picked up by iTunes and Amazon—everywhere. The goal? Find the real reason that people engage with the band Chuck Berry and find out what he's really up to. And if they like it, invite him to play in their town. Simple, right? But Chuck is no ordinary musician. He's a businessman—a seasoned marketer—with a unique approach to the game. The best part? We're not talking about a big
