Video Game Review: Mario Kart 9 was released on May 29th for the Nintendo Wii and continues the new golden period of the series that was so popular during the days of Super Mario Kart, when the series won an unprecedented five consecutive Game of the Year awards from 2001-2005. The wii console was a perfect fit for the title, since it was using an up-scaled Super Game Boy like graphics, which was the norm back in the SNES days. Unlike the early Game Boy Mario, this new game was also on a large number of tracks, which had seen a huge change from previous titles, and had plenty of design features that had never been seen before. Review: There has never been a video game that I really loved, that didn't immediately make me annoyed, and some games even managed to make me nauseous. Mario Kart's ranking system is exactly like a good soup, in that it's delicious and it tastes pretty great in the moment, but once you stop eating, there are all the little things left in the bottom of your bowl, and you're left wondering what in the world you were eating in the first place. Gameplay: Being a fan of the Mario Kart series, you would not expect this title to have any flaws. I am definitely glad that I was pleasantly surprised. Yes, the game has all of the annoying elements you'd come to expect, but they do the game justice. It's the little things that make the difference between "good" and "perfect." I've played almost every Mario Kart since the SNES version, and I have yet to find something I didn't like about this game. Topping this off is the fact that there's over 50 total courses and an average of over 8 cups per course, which can last up to 30 minutes, with the option to go longer if you want. Characters: The main characters are, of course, Mario, Luigi, Peach, Toad, and Yoshi, who each have their own personality, and each one brings their own quirks and special abilities. They all play as well as they did in previous Mario Kart titles, which is pretty good. You have to do a bit of work to get them all out of the hangover, though, since they all tend to be pretty slow in this title. Even Bowser has an unlockable Koopa shell, which has unique abilities. Bowser is the

What's new in Battle Balls:

"Ballistic" is an American reality television game show which aired in syndication and syndication on Bounce TV. The contestants, each representing a high school football player and weighing in at more than, compete for cash prizes by tossing heavy objects at a soft target. It is a spin-off of The Next Generation, and was hosted by former NCAA Division I football coach Tim Rutten. Premise Contestants (or teams) at each of several high schools must hit a large "bull's-eye" on a baseball field using oversize battle balls, various objects with weights, which move at extremely fast speeds after being thrown from. A safety worker, called a "Bull's Eye", makes the balls a massive size, as well as throws them to each of the contestants. So, the contestant must hit the bull's eye under the time allowed and get a chance to try again, as the contestant can only use one arm to throw. There are four teams of contestant, which are made up of one of each color jerseys (Black and White, Red, Yellow and Blue) selected from the winner's team, and the opponent's team. There are, additionally, twenty-eight of these large balls in play at one time, and the aim is to use the balls to get to the bull's-eye and hit it. Based on its abbreviated name, the game is an adaptation of the American martial arts game of speedball. At the end of the contest, all of the contestant teams face off again in a elimination round. Each team begins with seven balls in play, and the contestant teams are placed into four groups with no more than three contestants in each group. The teams that go into the elimination round face off each against a group of three, with the number of balls that each team is allotted for the duration of the elimination round determined by the following: first, if the team loses the previous round, it will be allotted three balls; second, if the team ties or loses the previous round, it will be allotted one ball; third, if the team ties or loses the previous round, it will be allotted no balls. The team that gets control of the largest number of balls, as well as the ability to throw the most balls without more balls exiting the field, when that number of balls reaches seven, wins the elimination round. Also, throughout the elimination round, if the opposing team fails to achieve the prescribed quota of balls, they are eliminated; otherwise they keep playing
