I have one child linear layout which contains child views. The children are not with same heights. I know in RelativeLayout for horizontal views the max width is 1.5 times the parent height. but in a Horizontal LinearLayout the max width is, say, 10 times the parent height and it depends on the padding value. But I want the width to be equal to the sum of all the child views. I have tried with various combinations of weightSum, but it does not fit my needs. The solution should not be code based. I am looking for XML and/or XML/DML values etc. to achieve this. A: Alright, I think this is a solution I can share. Though not the best and perfect one. I tried to reduce the number of resources as much as I could while keeping the original purpose intact. I will use a single layout for all the images. Suppose it is called structure.xml. in my case the sum of all child views is 9 and each image takes 1.5 times the width of the RelativeLayout. So, width will be of 18. I gave weight of (roughly the same width as in my original layout of 15) to RelativeLayout. The weight of child views are equal. Let's call their width as 4 units.

So, this one will not exceed  $1.5 * \text{child width}$  and hence I do not need width of 14 0cc13bf012

Is it possible to use a Microsoft Dynamics CRM 2015-Entity WITH a In Memory Data Provider? I have a folder of Entity and I want to use them with a INMEMORYPROVIDER. My question is how do I reference the Entity in the program? Is it possible? Any help is appreciated. A: I was trying to use Entity and reference it with InMemory Provider.

Unfortunately it doesn't work. You can only make use of an InMemoryProvider if you make use of it like so: `var s = new StreamReader("entity.txt"); var dt = new DataTable(); dt.Load(s); // or stream or whatever way to load your entity using (MemoryStream ms = new MemoryStream()) { new CrmSdkProvider().InMemory.CreateEntityFromDataTable(ms, dt); return ms.ToArray(); }` Now you can use ms variable to make use of entity. Hope this helps :) On Thursday night, construction began on The Park at Des Moines, an apartment complex off of Hwy 1 and I-80 that was designed by New York-based MGA Architects with input from architect Benatallah Yazdi of Yazdi Porpora Architects, and will soon be home to 49 affordable rental apartments, says David James, the marketing director for Bob and Joyce Laux, who also own the Laux's fast-food restaurants in the Des Moines area. Just in the first phase of construction, crews are working on setting up the infrastructure and preparing
