Spintire.The intestinal ruminants gastrointestinal tract can be considered as a discrete compartment in terms of digestive physiology and metabolism. This compartment produces and concentrates antigens, including some important mucosal disease associated antigens, such as Brucella sp., Mycobacterium avium, Helicobacter pylori and Salmonella sp. The two types of gastrointestinal lumens or tracts, the small intestine and the colon, represent distinct gastrointestinal compartments in terms of digestive physiology and metabolism. Both the small intestine and the colon consist of separate muscular and mucosal layers. The small intestine and colon contains different cell types and mucosal immunoreceptors. The small intestine represents a region of active digestion and absorption of nutrients, whereas the colon represents a region of storage of undigested materials. However, some aspects of the digestive physiology and the metabolism of both the small intestine and colon is similar. Both the small intestine and colon, represent discrete gastrointestinal compartments in terms of digestive physiology and metabolism. These compartments together represent the largest gastrointestinal epithelial surface (about 1800 m²). In adult humans and larger animals, the small intestine is about 4 m in length and the colon is about 4-8 m in length. The length of the small intestine is much greater than the length of the colon. The intestine consists of a single epithelial lining, a submucosa and a muscularis layer. The human small intestine is lined with a single layer of columnar epithelial cells separated by a mucosal layer of tightly intermingled goblet, and endocrine cells. Beneath the epithelium is the submucosa consisting of loose connective tissue containing the myenteric ganglia and strands of smooth muscle cell. The myenteric plexus is considered a unique plexus of neurons. The epithelial lining of the small intestine is continuous with the ileocaecal valve. Intestinal immune cells are represented by non-specific immunocytes (e.g., mast cells and macrophages) and mucosa
