Membranes for spontaneous compactization of lipophilic and lipophobic solutes. Membranes for spontaneous compactization of lipophilic and lipophobic solutes are reported. The membranes consist of a liquid crystal matrix phase (2-amino-4-ethyl-1,3-dithiolanium bromide) containing an adsorbed and sealed layer of the lipophilic compound octadecylammonium chloride. A pseudofacilitated diffusion model is used to explain how the solute migrates by a mechanism similar to a facilitated diffusion in a nonpolar medium. Some of the electrochemical properties of the system are discussed and a separation method of aqueous organic mixtures of solutes of different molecular hydrophilicity is proposed.A touch screen is an input interface for receiving inputs from a user. The touch screen senses the presence and location of a touch by a user and delivers the touch information to a computer. The user can then use a computer application program to interact with the computer. Generally, a touchscreen has a touch panel that is placed in front of a display screen. The touch panel may be a special liquid crystal display panel manufactured to detect a touch event. The touch panel has a plurality of touch-sensitive elements, which is adapted for sensing a touch event and generating a corresponding touch signal. A capacitive touch panel or a resistance touch panel may be used for sensing touches on the touch panel. However, both the capacitive touch panel and the resistance touch panel require the separate use of a stylus or a finger. To enable the use of the stylus or the finger, an image of the stylus or the finger are provided to the capacitive touch panel or the resistance touch panel for detection. Therefore, the image of the stylus or the finger disturb the touch signal, and may further reduce the sensitivity of the touch sensor. In addition, the image of the stylus or the finger may easily deform the capacitive touch panel or the resistance touch panel. For example, the capacitive touch panel or the resistance touch panel may easily collapse due to the deformation.Cătălin Ștefănescu Cătălin Ștefănescu (; born 16 March 1994) is a Romanian professional
