A new method to validate a non-invasive transcutaneous bilirubinometer-based method for total serum bilirubin measurement in term neonates. To evaluate a new approach for transcutaneous bilirubin (TcB) analysis in clinical practice by a modification of the UBRITB 10 Plus UV Bilirubinometer. A prospective study was performed to develop an in-house method for TcB analysis. A group of 26 term neonates was studied. All measurements were performed by the UBRITB 10 Plus UV Bilirubinometer. The relationship between the in-house TcB and direct (DCB) and total serum bilirubin (TSB) measurements was explored. The TcB/TSB ratio was 2.8 ± 0.5. Using the median TcB of 25 μmol/L, the mean TcB/TSB ratio was 0.93 ± 0.19. The best fit-line equation for the DCB/TSB pair was: $y = 0.78x + 0.6$ ($r2 = 0.91$). The new approach provided a reliable method to measure TcB in term neonates. In the future, prospective studies are necessary to evaluate this new approach in comparison to other methods.1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method for fabricating a semiconductor device, and more particularly, to a method for fabricating a semiconductor device that facilitates a planarization of an uppermost surface of a contact plug. 2. Description of the Prior Art A semiconductor device is manufactured by dividing a substrate into a plurality of semiconductor chips via a sawing process, and then each of the semiconductor chips is packaged. During an operation of the semiconductor device, an electrical contact is formed between metal layers disposed on an upper portion of the semiconductor chip and the substrate. Therefore, an insulating layer or a diffusion region is formed in a lower portion of the semiconductor chip to be in contact with the substrate. Generally, the diffusion region is formed in order to reduce a contact resistance. A conductive substance is filled in an upper portion of the insulating layer to be in contact with the metal layer. Then, the metal layer and the conductive substance are planarized to expose the surface of the insulating layer. The exposed insulating layer is defined as a contact plug. As described above, the conventional Brushes Brushes can be used with the Paint Bucket tool to fill an area with a specific color. There are three main types of brushes, namely, gradient brushes, pattern brushes and shape brushes. Brushes can have varied shapes, while brushes can be even more complex in shapes. The brush tip can be round, square, elliptic, and so on. The Brush Tip Shape (or Brush Type) The brush tip is the most important part of a brush. Brush Tip Shape In addition to shapes, you can also vary the size of a brush by varying the size of the tip. Brush Tips Variations in sizes of the brush tips are determined by the size of the brush Using brushes provides better control of the look and feel of the final effect. For example, if you use a large brush with a smooth surface, the image will appear more detailed. Using a small brush with a bristly surface could be used to apply a different effect. An eraser brush is used for either removing an object or adjusting the color of that object. Textured brushes can be used to add a 3D effect to your images. Using different styles and textures in brushes helps improve the final output. Over time, it will be helpful to learn all of the brushes.
