In controls, normal or slightly elevated values for 17-alphahydroxycorticosteroids were found in 3-5 days fasted samples; a stimulation was found after administration of ACTH and in humans on drugs inducing glucocorticoid excess. After an overnight fast 17-alpha-hydroxylation was elevated in the obese patients, more in adipocytes than in the nonadipocytes, and was further stimulated after ACTH and after treatment with glucocorticoid producing drugs. However, in individual patients, 17-alpha-hydroxylation of a dose of 100 mg dexamethasone was lower than that of 100 mg cortisone; this suggests that in patients with cirrhosis or hepatocellular carcinoma the 17-alpha-hydroxylation of glucocorticoids may be inhibited.
