these parts are phonetic syllabic and syllabic. the entire na'vi language has 1,000 syllables. the na'vi language also includes several morphemes, which are words that function as prefixes, suffixes, or infixes. opel was also the (non-functional) first language of the na'vi. the language was a living one, and it was supposed to be spoken by most of the population on pandora. the one official language of the na'vi was the three symbol language that was devised for external use, but wasn't meant to be learned by outsiders. the na'vi language is supposed to be similar to latin, in terms of the way it is structured (syntax). the language is thought to have been designed by a non-na'vi computer scientist or linguist, but it is not known who exactly. the na'vi are known to have had a writing system, but only one letter (as well as the na'vi language itself) is known to be written. the sekk (an ancient writing system) has been suggested, but this is not confirmed. the na'vi might have had a system of pictographs, although this is not confirmed. the yinbo (a pictographic system, not necessarily na'vi in origin) is also suggested, although this is unconfirmed. an important point is that the na'vi language sounds like a latin-like language, but is actually not related to any of the romance languages (i.e. it's not derived from latin, it's derived from a different language). there is no definitive lexicon or guide on this written script. as the na'vi language is not written, it cannot be learned by studying it alone. like the navi, it's better to be fluent in na'vi so you can enjoy a truly immersive experience. to learn na'vi, one must be able to hear and speak it fluently.

while the klingon language has been in use for almost 40 years, it's still an evolving language, undergoing further development. the most obvious aspect of that development is the addition of the syllable-final consonant cluster to the linguistic system. this consonant cluster, /hʃ/, was added to the language as part of the khanghar project, and represents an attempt at synthesizing klingon consonants. the finnish language is the official language of finland and sweden, and also used in some other parts of the world. it is a finno-ugric language, with a few borrowings from other language families. finnish is used as an official language in finland. the finns even have their own native language tv channel, finnish tv. the polish language is the second most widely spoken language in the world, after mandarin chinese. it's the official language of poland. the polish language has undergone several radical changes over the centuries. for example, it has a very elaborate set of agreement rules for the present tense. the polish language has a good variety of noun declensions, like all slavic languages. this is especially important when it comes to possessive declension. in english, possessive forms are derived from the noun, like "his", "her", "their", "its". polish has a good variety of possessive forms: "wy jesteście" (you are), "my jestem" (i am), "ich jest" (they are), "ona jest" (she is), "nas jest" (we are), "nas is" (they and we are), etc. a difficulty that slavic languages share is that of being hard to learn for non-slavic speakers. polish, like other slavic languages, has a lot of irregular verbs. however, polish has a different set of irregular verbs than its neighbors, and their usage is not even specified in most textbooks. 5ec8ef588b
